You Can Have the Finest of Wall Decoration In Your Home Now . . . at Low Cost!

Do It Yourself with squares by Wall-dec

The Wallpaper that comes in Easy-to-Handle Sheets with Miracle Wall-dec Paste supplied.

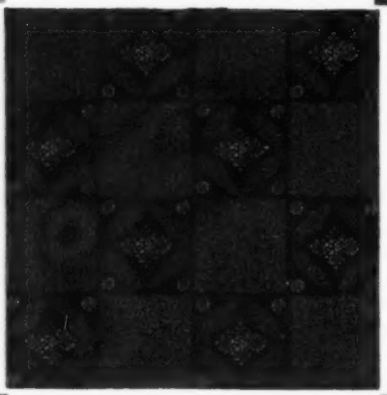
Each squares measures 14 inches high and wide. Each one is micrometrically cut to fit, and match. No trimming, no overlapping, no seams. Your choice of all kinds of patterns, Documentary and Contemporary, in Decorators Color Combinations . . . each a perfection of design and of color.



The Miracle Wall-dec Paste is given with every package of squares. You mix with water and use. You need only a bowl and a brush and you do not need the brush if you have a clean household sponge. squares goes on so easily a child can do it. The miracle paste is stainless, ordorless, damp proof and lasting.

squares give you professional Decorators Walls, at the price of cheap, ordinary wallpaper. You are the decorator . . . the color range covers your every need and desire. The patterns, colors and quality are the kind you'd expect to cost more than the $1.75 to $3.25, the price of squares per unit which covers about 15% more area than the old type roll.

YESTERDAY'S TRIFLES BECOME TOMORROW'S TREASURES

MEMO FROM: Marcia

IT'S OVER NOW: The 100th issue seems long ago and far away . . . as Carl (Antiques Dictionary) Drepperd says: "The 100th milestone is lovely but 'tis behind us now . . what is that shining on yonder hill? As I live, it readeth 101." Guess that means we can get Back to Business (the 100th was strictly fun!) . . . and pass on some of the notes we've been saving.

EXTRA DIVIDENDS: The National Bank of Commerce, Wellington, Kansas, has a Museum in their basement . . . open daily through the bank, free . . . people in the community contribute to the displays. Doesn't it make you itch to start a similar project in your community? You wouldn't have to be a bank (though banks are nice) . . you could be a P.T.A. sponsoring a "How America Used to Live" Museum in a school . . . bet a candlemold or a bedwarmer or a tin foot stove is just a picture in a book to many present day space cadets!

COMMUNITIES COOPERATE: A ticket to the Lunenberg, Mass. Antiques Show entitles holder to visit several old houses in town opened to the public . . for the benefit of the Community Kindergarten . . . For several years Spinning Wheel has been carrying notice of the DeWitt (N.Y.) Community Church Antiques Shows . . . was nice to see the show via pix and story in May issue of a popular home magazine . . . their innovation is a community exhibit, not for sale, separate from dealers exhibits . . . rouses interest and gets active cooperation from lots of people.

SPOON COLLECTORS: Mrs. J. C. Mitchell, Boca Raton, Fla., whose spoons pictured in July 1952 issue of Spinning Wheel created much interest, has had over 100 letters and several personal visits from spoon collectors this winter. Wishes someone would start a Spoon Collector's Club. Why not you, Mrs. Mitchell? Perhaps Musical Box Hobbyists, R. C. Bornand, Sec'y, 139—4th Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y. could give you information on how to start a specialized nation-wide organization with lots of distant members. They have just added 15 new members so far this year, one being the firm of Baud Freres, Ste. Croix, Switzerland (that's really distant), the last remaining old music box firm in Europe.

THEY DIDN'T SIGN THEIR NAMES: For the reader who asked about "rubbings", didn't you ever in your childhood "make money" by holding a tissue over a coin and rubbing it with the side of a lead pencil till the design appeard? Just do the same with a cup plate or any raised design on glass . . . A Southbridge, Mass. reader inquires where "Facts about Oriental Rugs" by Charles W. Jacobsen can be purchased. If not at your local bookstore, try Antiques Publications, Box 401, Frederick, Md.

For those who are confusing Antiques Publications with Spinning Wheel, we are two altogether separate companies . . . they advertise with us and we are good friends . . . but every time someone inquires the advertising rates of Spinning Wheel from them, that nice Miss Karen Taylor has to call us up . . . she said yesterday "If you all don't get us unconfused we're going to reverse the charges!" (The Bell company is doing all right without that!)

BACKGROUND'S IMPORTANT: Ever choose a simply lucious wall color for a "little budget refurbishing" and end up having to get new drapes, new rugs and new slip covers before you'd let your Bridge Club in the house? The Adelphi Paint and Color Works, Ozone Park 17, N. Y. have worked out a Redi-Guide to Scientific Color Harmony to remedy that situation. . . a choice of 22 harmony blends allows you to fit your new wall color to your present appointments. Whether you're just doing a little "touching up" or starting from scratch with a brand new house, if you follow the Redi-Guide, you can't go wrong . . . your dream house will look like you dreamed it . . . all done with Color Logic . . never saw more complete or sensible painting advice, nor more scrumptious decorator colors. The Adelphi people will send you a Redi-Guide if you write them . . . and with spring in the air, and your painting hand getting itchy, now's the time to do it . . . allow at least one wonderful week to study the combinations . . and you'll end up re-doing the entire house!

ANTIQUES SUMMER SCHOOL: The N. Y. State Historical Association is holding its 6th annual seminars in Cooperstown, N. Y. July 5-11 . . . a wonderful week for antiques enthusiasts as well as local historians, collectors, writers, teachers, librarians, museum personnel (and employees of antiques magazines) lucky enough to attend. "The American Frugal Housewife" course will have you baking bread in brick ovens, preparing food on the hearth, churning and even cheese-making; while the Early American Decoration course is some very practical work in stenciling walls, furniture, tin, etc, under the direction of Mrs. Emily J. Heath, President of the Esther Stevens Brazer Guild. Among other courses, less laboritorical but just as much fun, are

Some Japanese Pottery of 1724

FROM THE ORIGINAL DESIGNS AND TEXT OF TEISHU KOYU

ONCE in a Blue Moon is a find as important as this made public. This text, with exemplary pictures is taken directly from an account of the design, glaze, dimensions, et cetera of "Meibutsu Ki" or tea caddies, and some bowls, saucers and plates, designed by Teishu Koyu and recorded in manuscript and in original drawings, dated 1724. There are three volumes, totaling 880 pages (Japanese & Chinese style, meaning that the recto of verse pages, and the verso of recto pages, are blank, and uncut).

Nothing short of a complete translation, now under way, by scholars of Japanese characters of two and a quarter centuries ago, will suffice for definite remarks on these important documents. It is possible, however, to select exemplary drawings from the 450 pieces illustrated, with special reference to the types and kinds of objects traded in by the Dutch East India Company and carried to Europe for general distribution. Thus for the first time in any antiquarian journal is pictured "Old Japan" ware from drawings by the artist potter, of wares familiar to us now as antiques of considerable merit. The captions under each group of pictures explain each piece in detail. Our one and only regret is that the drawings, in color and tint and tone, must be reproduced here in black and white. Captions, in every case, mention color details.

We look forward to eventual publication of most of this series of original designs for Japanese pottery of the early 18th century, and to further details of the text which refers to glaze, turning, thickness of wall, marking and other important details.

Examples of what are now truly antique Japanese wares, every drawing a potters pattern and made well over two centuries ago. Certain of the drawings by Teishu Koyu constitute patterns outlining the desired "accidental" of dark glaze over the light. A greenish-grey stone ware color predominates in these interesting designs. Some collectors may recognize types here pictured as resembling closely the wares today considered "Old Japan".

Paper Dolls

By Daphne Carroll

ABOVE, in the order named are the three sirens of the American stage who thrilled our grandfathers. Here they are as paper mannequins, with articulated arms and legs, ready to be dressed, but not in paper finery. No, indeed! These paper dolls are 14 inches tall and no matter how daringly strip-teasy they may look, they were made with the idea of costuming in silks, satins, and laces and to be stood against a dressing table, or a bachelor's chest mirror; perhaps for the same reason that prompts today's collectors to clip pictures of their favorite movie celebrities and tuck in the corner of their dressing table mirror.

The name of the maker is not given on these examples. It may be suspected though that he was an assembler of the die-cut, color lithographed parts, and that he had a patent on the assembly method. At any rate, each doll is stamped "Patented 1880". Of course, Ada Rehan is the most daring of the dolls and, according to theatrical lore, was the most daring of the damsels. Here she is in opera hose and gloves, ballet slippers and baby blue unmentionables. Each of the figures has an actual, perfect, hourglass torso. This is the only plain cardboard piece of the doll.

These dolls, perhaps the most ambitious paper dolls issued in the last half of the 19th century, are not so rare as to be unprocurable. We have heard that one shop on Sixth Avenue, New York, sold out a remainder of several thousand of them within the past decade at $1 each. These, then, would seem to be the main source of currently available examples. Paper dolls, however, are not generally items of antiques shop merchandise. Rather, one must go to the antiquarian bookshops which specialize in childrens' books and paper toys. The history of the stage stars who inspired these dolls, plus the patent marking, dates them beyond question. But who shall say they will not again shine in bright lights? Here is a possible inspiration for a Disney Hollywood production in these high spots of our paper doll parade.

What is a Spring Chair?

(1) Any platform rocker using coil springs. (2) A child's safety chair, suspended on two coil springs. It "bounded, bounced and swung", said the makers, Tothills of London.

French and American Paperweights

A report on the sale of the Goodrich collection Feb. 28, 1953, courtesy Parke-Bernet Galleries.

THE Goodrich collection of Saint Louis, Clichy, Baccarat, Sandwich, Millville and other American Paperweights was noted for its representative examples of the best types: the latticino, sulphide, cane, fruit and millefleurs. As was expected, the dispersion of this collection was an event of some importance, the impact of which is perhaps not as yet felt in all centers of collecting. It is no longer a secret that, for some months, there has been rumor to the effect that French paperweights, (because of increased imports) were due for a considerable devaluation, while the weights made in America were destined for a rise in value.

The sale would seem, if not to disprove, at least to refute the rumors. Note the prices realized for the nine examples illustrated. There were seventy-four items, or lots which, under the hammer of the auctioneer realized a total of almost nine thousand dollars. It should be noted that age cracks, surface dents, kiln imperfections, chips and other abrasions were all cited in the catalog. These very imperfections, or evidences of use, are proof that the weight has not been reground or repolished.

While paperweights are bibelots of almost jewel-like quality they are not jewels, and not, for example, price supported and distributed as are diamonds and emeralds. The value of paperweights of the very best kinds forever depends more on the whims, vogues, and fashions of collecting than on supply, intrinsic value, or cost of production. When a 3" Clichy filigree door-knob brings $400 and a Sandwich latticino based pink poinsettia weight, almost 3" in diameter brings $55, it is no wonder that newcomers to this high meadow of collecting are perplexed.

An ink bottle, Stourbridge make, with millefiori base sold, with two paperweights, as a lot, for $90. A pair of Stourbridge millefiori base candlesticks, with air-twist stems, sold for $520. That is as much of the story of this historic collection's dispersal as can be told here. But the objects will make more history for, we are quite sure, certain of the items were purchased for stock, by resourceful dealers.

Milk Glass Lamps of the 1880's

Parlour and banquet, mold blown and hand painted...

THE vogue of collecting what, for want of a better name, have been called "Gone-with-the-wind" lamps, has not abated. It is more widespread today than at any time since collecting began. This collecting, it is generally admitted, started when millions of people, seeing the great motion picture, noted the graceful lamps in that fabulous mansion of Scarlet O'Hara; the one she abandoned for her beloved Tara. When the collecting of like, or comparable lamps began, it was focused more on the comparable than the like, and comparable was an elastic term meaning precisely what the buyer wanted it to mean. Now there is a new philosophy of collecting these lamps. Wise buyers are seeking the old banquet and parlor lamps, which, made in great numbers in the 1870's and 1880's, became the favored lamps of the upper and the middle classes of all the Americas; not only in our own country, but in Mexico, and all the Republics of South America.

The cooperative sale of these fine lamps outside the Continental United States was not merely an effort confined to lamp makers. The oil industry had a big stake in their sale for, wherever lamps were sold in quantity, there was also a market for illuminants; coal oil or kerosene.

In the researches conducted by Americana Foundation, a most important group of contemporaneous photographs was found in Mexico. A deposit with the Pachuca Branch of the National Bank which was probably left there in 1880 by an early importer, was disposed of in 1914 as old papers by the bank. Instead of being destroyed, the file was left on the shelf of an antiquarian shop where it was discovered. No less than fifty composite photographs, hand colored, embracing 150 fine lamps, shades, and gloves, comprise this historically invaluable cache.

Arrangements have been made for serial publication of all these lamp, shade, and globe photographs for, they constitute a record of the kind hitherto excessively rare in the annals of collecting. This is not to say other caches will not, or have not been found.* This exposition however does constitute one good authentic pool of documented, comtemporaneously photographed examples of lamps made, and in the precise design and color.

The captions under this first publication of the original lamps describe each in terms of color and makes mention of other data to be found on the originals. Additional examples will be pictured from time to time in Spinning Wheel until the complete catalog is recorded.

Gorgeous mold blown milk, or opaque glass lamps, hand painted, brass mounted, banquet lamps with Royal type kerosene burners. They measure approximately 28" high to top of chimney. Decoration of left example, rose sprigged in pink, blue and green; Center, pink, blue, green, and yellow; Right, heavy gold baroque ornamentation with fine tinted sprigs in blue and green.

* It was your Editor's pleasure in 1948 to examine one of the early catalogues of the Westmoreland Specialty Company. In this, were included similar illustrations (sepia photographs, hand tinted) of early oil lamps and other products of the company. Parts of this catalog were reproduced in the May 1948 issue of this magazine with the text, "Milk Glass and Crystal".

Important New Data for Antiques Collectors

Terraline Vases, 1885-1890

WHAT kind of ware is this?" said the collector, picking up a vase on which a spray of roses in high relief nestled in somewhat soiled coloration, the leaves of the spray standing out as free and as bold as the petals of the roses. The dealer just didn't know. She suspected it was "early hand painted" or something. Now this isn't an isolated case. It is happening in a good many antiques shops. Most of our readers know precisely what it is to listen to the election returns during a national contest. Local news comes first, or depending upon geographic location, news from the East comes first. But one district after another, through the night, comes through with its balloting results. Now stretch that night into a lifetime, and instead of election returns, think of it in terms of the household goods of successive decades finally being sold off or placed on the market. The individual household seldom makes a ripple on the surface, but when, say, a few thousand homes that contain the remains of items purchased in the 1870's and 1880's, empty their goods and chattels into antiques or even second-hand channels, we can notice it. We are noticing more and more of these nameless, high relief applied decoration, hand painted vases in certain of the shops. Most of the vases, regardless of shape, are embellished with either rose sprays or water lilies.

A Baltimore source which prefers to remain anonymous has been kind enough to supply us with what is guaranteed to be the true facts. Here then, is the story: These are Terraline vases "for oil painting". Terraline, as a term, means "of the nature of earthenware". Actually, some of the vases were of fired clay, and some were of plastic earth and cement, molded, dried, but not fired. The entire surface of the vases was designed for coating with enamel, and for coloration in the same medium. The art was a parlor pastime. Hirshberg, Hollander & Company of Baltimore were extensive dealers in Terraline vases and the colors, brushes, oils, et cetera.

These vases were sold extensively from c. 1885 to c. 1890, after which the vogue seems to have died out. The reason for the passing may be found in the fact that Terraline vases, in the white, sold for $1 to $3 each. The cost of the materials to decorate them cost another several dollars. This investment, a minimum of $3 to produce a "fancy" parlor vase, was considerably in excess of the cost of a similar vase of art glass from an American factory, or a fancy piece of ware from a European majolica pottery.

The examples shown picture the vases uncolored, or in the white, with their selling prices. These include data indicating that such vases were available from 5½ to 19 inches high. All were characterized by bold relief decoration of flowers and leaves, imitative of Irish Belleek ware and of Dresden type wares.

Curling Iron Heater

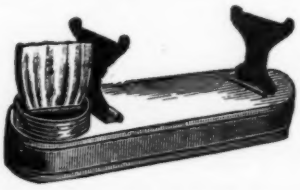
Shopping for antiques will occasionally turn up some unidentifiable items. Would you know this one if you found it? It's a frizzing iron heater, used for heating irons for curling wigs as early as the 17th century. Often found in the equipment of tinners, jewelers and silversmiths who used them for heating small soldering irons; they were made as late as 1910.



Most examples after the 1860's burned kerosene; before that time, spirits of wine or fatty lamp fluids.

"Memoirs of a Huguenot Family"

Published by Putnam 1853

Perhaps one of the most important early American journals of record, that of the Reverend James Fontaine, 1715-1716, was translated from the original French, 1852, by Ann Maury, and published 1853 by the house of Putnam. Dr. Fontaine and his family traveled in Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania and New York. The autobiography (in manuscript) remained unpublished for 140 years and then, when translated, was found to contain invaluable intimate data on the lives and activities of one of the really important elements of our 17th and 18th century colonization.

The Huguenots, from the Swiss term, Eigenossen, meaning "the against faction" were the original reformed group who advocated the reading of the scriptures and the reading of the Mass, in the language of the people. This movement began in France, in advance of the activities of Wycliffe in England, and John Huss in Bohemia, a follower of Wycliffe.

It is seldom fully appreciated that practically every immigrant from Continental Europe came to the colonies because of historic or current religious beliefs. Among the settlers from Europe not in this category were the Swedes who established a colony on the Delaware and the Dutch who were among the earliest non-English colonists. The French, Swiss and Rhenish German arts and crafts in the colonies were impressed by these religious dissenters. Frequently they brought but little goods with them, but what they created here was for many years within the pattern of the prototype objects of their own homelands. This was true of dress, of furniture, of domestic utensils, heating methods, architectural style of homes and cottages, and cuisine. "Memoirs of a Huguenot Family" by Ann Maury is one of the important records of this movement.

PHRENOLOGY ANTIQUES

Are they valuable items?

The major ones are the pottery and porcelain busts on which the phrenological zones are marked and lettered. These, ranging from ½ to life size, seem to hold a price range of from $50 to $100 each. A smaller bust, used as an inkwell, brings about the same, or slightly less. The spurious science of phrenology, advocated by Spurzheim and others (in the U.S.A. by Fowler & Wells) was based on the scientific studies of Franz Joseph Gall, on the anatomy and physiology of the brain and skull formation. The earliest English account of Gall's work was published in 1807.

Gift Annals

Table books for collectors evaluated and listed . . .

By CANDICE WENDT

THE Gift Annual was an American publishing institution from the late 1830's. In philosophy, we probably borrowed the basic idea from the English, but what we did about Gift Annuals and other Gift Books was strictly American. Facts, and values, are more important than opinions; therefore we shall confine these remarks to facts and to prices current since 1950. We realize the danger of price quoting. Therefore we must go on record here and now and state: the prices here quoted are not what we, or anyone we know, will pay for these items; they are prices either asked by antiquarian booksellers for the items, or prices realized at book auctions, and you must be your own judge as to what you may get in dollars for comparable items, or pay for them if you want to collect them. Gift annuals have what we now regard as very "stuffy" literary and poetic content. But, on occasion, the annuals contained contributions by famed American and other authors, such as Poe, Hawthorne, Emerson, Lowell, Whittier, Holmes, Irving, Tennyson, Dickens, Trollope and Scott. In some cases this may be the first publication of the essay and so has first edition value.

Gift annuals also contained elegant engravings, sometimes just pretty, sometimes documentary (in that the picture displays furniture, stoves, mantels, and elegancies, furniture, et cetera, of the period) and sometimes historic; views of places, events, et cetera, of American interest. These constitute the chief value of Gift Annual content. The number of different issues—to those willing to do a bit of calculating—is an indication of the production of these annuals down through the years.

This list is far from a complete bibliographic check list of published annuals. Neither is it a recording of the number of years any annual was issued. Some were of one issue only. Others were published for ten or more years. Those marked with a star (*) can be characterized as either having various places of publication from year to year, or having especially valued literary contributions, accounting for the price range. This is, however, a first recording of a major number of the gift annuals which, whether underpriced or overpriced, are now to be found in antiques shops. It should be noted that the prices here given in no case derive from antiques shops, but from antiquarian book stores or auctions of old books. In some cases we arrive at the auction price by averaging, because often annuals are "bunched" for such sale, anywhere from four to a dozen being offered as a lot.

The THUMB Bible

The thumb Bible, so called because of its size, is an antique book of considerable merit; a Bible in miniature. Some are less than two inches square, page size. We have seen an American one, printed at Boston 1765, priced at $250. Later examples have been noted priced from $5 upward by antiquarian booksellers.

An addition of considerable importance to our knowledge of fine art glass is this documented essay on the . . .

Hahn Glassware of Jablonec, Bohemia

WHO made this glass? What is the pattern name? What are these curious tall beakers, rose vases? Is this Mary Gregory? Is this Venetian? Is this Stouvenal, or Dorflinger, Clichy, or what? These questions, all of them, have been posed in respect of the glasswares here pictured. And not once have we had the right answer. They are from the Cristallglassfabric of Hahn, Jablonec, Bohemia, and, in philosophy, are descended directly from the Venetians who settled there, from the island fortress glassworks of Murano. As it happens, these pictures are not photographs of glass now in collections, and attributed to the Jablonec works. They are photocollotypes issued by the maker of the glass, each item hand colored to display the precise nature and quality of the ware pictured. These, then, are completely documented pictures and whoever has glass of similar nature now can know precisely that what they have is Hahn glass from Jablonec, Bohemia, of a date ranging from 1850 to 1880.

It is to be regretted that the illustrations cannot be shown here, as in the original pictures, with the magnificent color tones that each piece bears. The delicate, superb hand decorations range from hues of deep ruby to pale pinks to orchids; powder to royal blues; creams to deep lemon yellows; each flower or bird carrying its own natural color. Spinning Wheel is indebted to the Americana Foundation, one of whose members made this important discovery and generously passed it along to us for publication. There will be more detailed information on Hahn glassware in a future issue. Right now, the discovery has sufficient importance to take the stage pictorially, and dominate the scene.

Satin glass berry plates for fitting in silver wire stands. Chief market in USA were makers of fine silver-plated table wares.

Clear, blue, and ruby glass water sets hand decorated with leaves and flowers. The fifth one is identical to what is popularly called "Mary Gregory", but here is Hahn, Bohemian.

Hand painted matte finish satin glass vases. It is obvious these are not "quick-painted" bargain store wares but really fine art glass of superior quality. The prices, given in French francs indicate a retail price range of from one dollar each for the small pieces upward to ten dollars or more, per item.

Matte finish satin, or parian glass, vases, from left to right; four tile-form surface vases in varied shades of pink and blue, funnel form vase, gadroon edged tapering vase, flat edged tapered vase with Colonial figure, smaller gadroon edge, small flat edge, and small sawtooth rim with child or cupid. The fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth examples are exquisitely hand painted in the best porcelain tradition.

Unique Zoetrope, c. 1830's. It has "cinerama" action. Note the section of film showing through slot. When in motion, the entire surface of the drum shows the action. The inner drum spins in opposite direction. All action is from the hand crank, geared by belting to the drums.

ZOETROPES!

By Carl W. Drepperd

THIS device, in some form or other, has been, it seems, drawn to me. In fact, so mysterious has been my happening upon these items which, to nearly all others are indeed rarities, that I begin to wonder if they do not recognize in me, a kin spirit, or something. In the past decade, while scores, and perhaps hundreds of people have been almost madly seeking any kind of a zoetrope, no less than twelve have come within my opportunity to purchase, at very advantageous prices. That I have passed the opportunities on to others is a part of my boy-scout routine. Or shall I say it's the devil in me? Just get somebody, anybody, to buy a zoetrope and you have started a toy collector on the road to renewal of his, or her, youth. And of course, they just go on, and on, buying toys and other antiques!

Zoetrope, as a name, derives from Zoetropon, Greek, meaning wheel of life, or animation; Zoe- life. Tropon- to turn. It is alleged that the carvings on the pillars of the temple at Karnak, Egypt, displayed Osiris in subtly changed attitudes so that a believer, walking along the temple, and blinking his eyes, saw Osiris in motion. Concerning this legend, now perhaps 3,500 years old, I can give no authentication. But it could be true. Certainly this optical illusion toy sprang from somewhere. And optical illusion it is, whether a zoetrope, or the very latest motion picture. All the motion is due to the fact your eye and brain retains, for a split second, the image it sees. If there is a blink, whether of your eye lid, or an interval between the showing of the object, then any perceptible shift in position of the image is received as the picture of motion. Understand, we are discussing motion pictures and not your vision of actual objects in motion.

Of all the Zoetropes, Phenakistescopes, Wheels of Life, Thaumatropes, and Daedadali, that have come to my attention, the example pictured is far and away the best example. The only rub is there are but twelve films. Originally the machine would have had 100 or more. This machine is unlike the regular zoetropes for this reason; instead of looking through slots, (the chopper effect) at a film strip coiled against the walls of the drum, here, the effect is achieved by two drums, one spinning the film face outward, and moving counterclockwise and the other, the outer drum, with visual slots, four in number, equally spaced, spinning clockwise, at twice the speed of the inner drum.

The result is seeing the entire strip in action from outside the machine. Motion is imparted by a crank wheel with ingenious gearing and belts. This machine dates from c. 1830 and may be by William G. Horner, or by M. N. Reyand, both of whom were producers of such devices. In America, Bradley of New York and Springfield, Mass., made Zoetropes commercially from 1868. In 1872 a paper collar box in the form of a small zoetrope was featured. Bradley also made a miniature zoetrope with tiny films, examples of which are scarcer than the large ones. In 1850 a zoetrope magic lantern slide was made, the slide costing five dollars. It had a circular glass disc of animated cartoon characters, spinning one way while the chopper spun in the other direction. This slide projected not a strip of motion, but a spot, in which the action was confined. The machine pictured will do the same thing, or give the same effect, if one views it through a slot the same size as those in the outer drum.

Happily, I reconsidered buying a zoetrope at the White Plains show, November 1952. I say happily, meaning happily for the ultimate purchaser who was delighted with it and got it because I let it go. This machine had over fifty film strips. It was priced at $38. Don't ask me why that unusual, or odd, price. I do know the ultimate buyer paid $100 for it and was as happy as a lark to pay that price. My little one cost me $5. My Phenakistescope cost me $25. The machine pictured cost, again, that magic price, $38. And again, at least 5,000 people saw this machine and did not react to it before I saw it, and was conquered. Now, again, there are opulent collectors who want to take it away from me, with money.

Fret Sawed Elegancies

By Earl B. Breeding

STARTLING, amazing, unbelievable, dumbfounding, are words used every day by antiques collectors when faced with a first example of something hitherto unknown, or with proof of a one time widespread use—with examples displaying scope — of what had been thought to be something unusual or unique. When Andre Charles Boule, or Buhl, invented the scroll saw that now is named for him, and begin cutting out intricate designs in metal, horn, and wood for inlays, he was working for the very upper class of France in the long reign of Louis XIV. His was the superior furniture that was used in the chateaux mentioned in the romances of Alexandre Dumas. Today Boule, or Buhl furniture, of its period, is one of the superior antiques.

The gimcrackery and gewgawry that came into being after the close of the War-between-the-States was something else again. Directly related to the art of Monsieur Boule, it was seized upon by every Tom, Dick, and Harry, as a means of doing something, making something, being consciously creative. That an immense amount of scroll saw gadgetry was made and sold is no secret. But how immense the amount, and how wide the scope of design; how readily available were the patterns, and where they could be had, is something for Spinning Wheel here to reveal. Briefly, this is the story: Parr of Buffalo, offered some scroll saw patterns which he found in Switzerland, during a post-war trip in 1865. Parr also sold machine saws, some of which were powered with his model steam engines. The Millers Falls Company sold fretwork patterns and clockworks. Bowman & Russell sold fretwork patterns and saws. The last two concerns were absorbed by the portly entrepreneur, here pictured in all of his glory right in his own workshop; H. L. Wild, of 279 East 10th Street, in the City of New York, one Saturday morning in the Spring of 1876. Do not bother to attempt identification of any of the unbelievable Boule sawed items with which he is surrounded. These, at least in part, will be pictured singly, and some of them will make you catch your breath.

Since it has been my training to detail in full whatever data sources I draw upon, it is altogether proper that we include here the complete catalog of patterns for objects designed by, and sold by, the Wild enterprise. Here, then, is the catalog listing of all items I have found which can be documented as Wild production:

Fret Sawed Elegancies

more, mechanical parts. The movements were not cheap. The "works" for the windmill were priced at $6; for another clock, having a trumpeter playing a variety of tunes, the works cost $16; machinery for the steamboat and for the locomotive at $15 and $16.50. The horse race machinery cost $20.

The patterns for sawing out were inexpensive, ranging from 10¢ to a high of $1. All patterns were full size and could, if desired, be glued on the thin basswood as a sawing pattern.

You may have noticed certain of these items in antiques and curio shops within the past ten or more years. They have not been plentiful. Yet, at one time, about one-half of the homes of America had at least one example of this fretwork, often painted black, but sometimes in color.

The "mechanical" items, somehow, gravitated to corner saloons, porterhouses, and beer cellars where they were at first objects of curiosity, and finally a sort of traditional relic of the house. Our investigation seems to indicate that perhaps one such establishment in three—of the common, garden or neighborhood variety—had such a device on display as late as 1918. You know what happened, and why. Prohibition ended the old-time saloon. And if the mechanical display gadgets were not saved by the owners, off went the relic, along with the bar, the tables, the bung-starters and all the rest. Yes, there were some exceptions. Some of the neighborhood saloons had closing "wakes" at which the cherished relics were given away, or sold to the highest bidders. Indeed, prohibition marked the end of what was characterized as a lawless era. But here are the things which existed before the close of that era . . when a man having achieved a masterpiece of fret-sawing, could take it to the corner saloon, display it to an appreciative audience and, more often than not, receive offers for it that made the making a profitable thing.

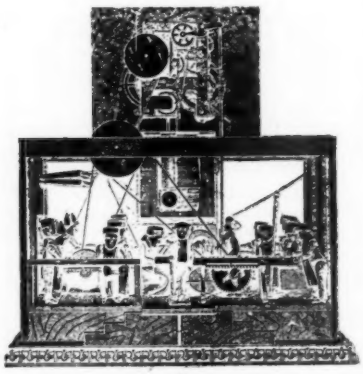
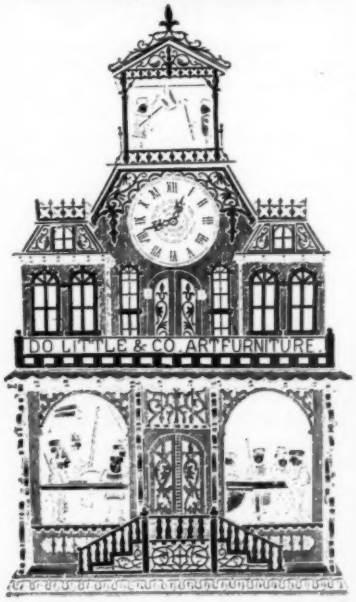
That is the story in a rather tight nutshell. Here are the pepper and salt, the sugar and spice . . the pictures that prove, demonstrate and document. These are from Wild's actual designs. What more proof can we have?





*Top, the machinery ensemble, with figures, and bottom, the completed Wild "Workshop" with clocks, striking jacks, glass windows, and sign. Pattern cost $1.00. Six tune machinery cost $18.00. # Enriched Razors of Sheffield Steel

By Stella Wythe

BARBERING Tools, in general and in particular, are destined to good place in the land we are creating today—meaning, of course, the land of the antiques of tomorrow. That nearly all present day collectors are unaware of the history of barbering and barber shops, and of the tools and appurtenances of the trade that fell just short of a profession, has not deterred a brave few from collecting and, inevitable, to exposition of their collections. When this happened, some antiquarians were amazed to discover they had been collecting barbers' antiques when they were quite sure they were collecting art glass. Of course the vogue for occupational shaving mugs is now so widespread that everyone, almost, recognizes these objects on sight. But, when it comes to the rare atmosphere of presentation, personalized, and luxury razors, there is blissful ignorance.

Here, then, is to inject what might be called an "interrupting idea". These razors, dating from c. 1848, and displayed as "modern" at the London Crystal Palace, 1851, are of Sheffield steel, with blades damaskeened in floral and heraldic patterns, in sheaths of horn, ivory, and tortoise shell. The makers, Fenney, of Sheffield, produced the entire razor; blade and case. The case, almost always, is engraved with the name, the initials, or cypher of the owner. Further, such masterpieces were often made in sets of seven, one for each day of the week, each used only once a week, the steel blade "resting" between shaves. These were gentlemen's razors but not necessarily razors used by the gentlemen who, in many cases, had personal servants to barb them, or had daily visits from a professional.

Here, at any rate, is another item of antiquity destined for collecting notice. Of course, the razor often used by Clipper Ship captains, a product of China, (Pictured in Dictionary of American Antiques, page 85, item 11) will now be sought diligently by many experts who haven't even known of its existence (including your truly) but here, in all truth, are razors of far better steel, and more engaging appearance.

Zoetropes

What should happen with zoetropes of all kinds is, they should be collected by the very people who earn their livelihood in the business made out of the zoetrope by Edison; the Motion Picture Industry. What the stars of Hollywood collect now is one thing, what they could collect, in zoetropes and films, is something else again. When Dr. Edward Muybridge made his first instantaneous photographic strips, they were used in making films for zoetropes. Some of those films, believe it or not, are nudies . . . one a Lady Godiva on horse and hair not flowing! And Mr. Walter Disney might well collect zoetrope films and do a silly symphony of Donald Duck chased by a zoetrope . . . all its film characters coming to life (idea copyright, and I mean it). What a howler that would be. My type of zoetrope is already in the movies. In the documentary film shown in introduction to the new cinerama, they display one like it, in action.

All of which boils down to a crystallization of the truth Spinning Wheel has been crying from its masthead; the antiques of business are fascinating, and every business, no matter how modern it thinks it is, has antiques. The barrel of the zoetrope pictured displays its pictures in motion on a curved surface. That is what they call cinerama: the latest form of motion picture display.

Scrimshawed Jackstraws

SCRIMSHAWING, as a term, doesn't mean a special kind of production. It means pastime work of any kind; work done to while away idle hours, generally on shipboard, especially on long trading or whaling voyages. We are apt to think of it as whale ivory and bone carving, scratch decorated, and colored with pitch, tar, verdigris and red lead—the pigments most readily available on shipboard. That is because most of the scrimshawing we have seen are the ivory and bone pie-wheels, needle cases, busks, stays, powder horns, and other scratch engraved items which many sailors made as take-home gifts.

Here is a set of jackstraws, scrimshawed for a mariner's own use; to play a tedious game and while away hours of nothing to do — but play games, or scrimshaw! This set of jackstraws was handed down to a friend of mine, from a great-grandfather, through a grandfather. There are twenty carved, shaped pieces in forms of blubber shovel, walking stick, shuttle, harpoon, blubber axes, tridents, et cetera, and a bundle of needle-form straws with very little effort at originality. Undoubtedly this set was made by a sailor on a whaling voyage. The pieces average four inches in length, and on the shaped ones there is an inked-in "value" ranging from 10 to 60. There are two kinds of bone used; whale ivory, which is now a creamy yellow in tone, and salt beef bone, which examples are still quite white in tone. The date would seem to be circa 1835-1845.

Now here is something for collectors to consider. We have all heard of scrimshawed game pieces; chessmen, checkers, and such. This is a new twist in an authenticated set of scrimshawed jackstraws. But who knows of other, comparable scrimshawing? We would be glad indeed to hear from any other collectors who can add something to the record of scrimshawing by American sailors, on the long, long voyages of ships in the China trade, and in whaling.

"Modern" Refreshment Stand of 1853 . . .

P. T. Barnum, in the 1850's, was a partner in a publishing venture of some magnitude: The "Illustrated News". This publication, not unlike today's "Life" Magazine in its philosophy of telling the news in pictures, was not above commenting on the vagaries and foibles of the people. Its artists "designed" many fearful and wonderful things among which, in 1853 was this engaging furniture idea announced as a design for a "timetable" with refreshment time marked to the minute. It was considered very clever by its designer. Laugh all you please at this gentle spoof at gadget furniture of that day and age . . . and then ponder this: we've heard of a collector who, buying a huge, flat hanging watch that was once a jeweler's outdoor sign, said "now all I need for something special is a really suitable base and I'll have a rather unique table top." Here's to hope this will reach the eye of that collector. All you need find is a 30 inch high statue of Father Time and you have a time table!

By a firm of American makers known wherever guns were in use, 1789 to 1850 . . .

The Drepperd Blunderbuss Pistol

By A. M. Carey

NO more fascinating item in the history of American gun-making is to be found than that of the Drepperd family cartel of gunsmiths which flourished at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, from 1789 to 1850. After the close of the Mexican war this cartel made its one great mistake. John Drepperd, then the chairman of the group, decided that America would fight no more wars, and that the frontiers were cleared of troubles! The businesses were disposed of to several former apprentices, notably Henry Leman and Henry Gibbs. Leman went on to become an important source of guns for the Union Army, but he, too, made one grievous error. He was paid for his guns in paper money. He had so little faith in "shinplaster" that he sold it at a big discount for hard money. The shinplaster remained at par. Leman's discounting was the difference between profit and loss on his huge government orders!

John Michael Drepperd started the business when he was mustered out of the Pennsylvania Line, before the end of the Revolution. He converted his Father's Weaving Mill into a rifle boring mill. His sons, brothers, brothers' sons, and his sons' sons continued making rifles and pistols.

At one time (in the 1830's) there were no less than eleven makers, all of whom marked their guns with the name "Drepperd Lancaster." One, Henry Drepperd, used his name in full on some pieces, claiming that, being named for the first and most famous gunsmith of Lancaster, William Henry, he should use that name. He, eventually, dropped its use. There were no less than 1000 Drepperd rifles used by the Kentucky and other Riflemen at the battle of New Orleans. Thus did the Pennsylvania Rifle come to be misnamed "Kentucky". Boone owned several Drepperd rifles. Members of the Drepperd clan, including Colonel Eifort, of Greenup, Kentucky, acted as agents along the near frontiers, in Kentucky, Indiana, and Missouri. The Drepperd pistol with blunderbuss barrel here pictured is a Stage Coach Driver's Pistol. It was not designed as a killing weapon. Loaded with buckshot, it was designed for use as a disabling weapon, in protection of a stage from highwaymen. The "spread" of the shot was at a definite angle, somewhat in excess of the bell-mouth of the gun barrel. The barrel, of brass, bears the hall marks of Birmingham, indicating the barrel was imported. The small silver shell

WOOL WORKED MOTTO PATTERNS

an additional listing

Out of the tremendous response from SPINNING WHEEL readers to the listing of 46 known patterns of wool worked mottoes, April issue, the most informative was from a Keene, N. H. collector. Clifford S. Reynolds of Reynolds Red Barn Antiques informs us that he has been collecting for several years with a special effort to see just how many different examples he could assemble. To date he has more than 70 different ones, the following of which were not included with those listed in April Spinning Wheel:

47. What is Home without a Mother
48. With Joy we Greet You
49. Savior like a Shepherd lead us
50. Rock of Ages Cleft for Me
51. Remember me
52. Thou Art My Hope
53. Welcome Home
54. Labor has sure Reward
55. Touch Not—Taste Not—Handle Not
56. Eat Drink and be Merry
57. We mourn our Loss
58. Nothing but Leaves
59. Learn to be Good
60. Peace, Prosperity, Good Will to all
61. Forget Me Not
62. Peace be unto this House
63. Friendship—Love—Truth (with Oddfellows emblems)
64. The Lord's Prayer in a large square
65. The Ten Commandments in a large square
66. What is Home without a Father
67. God Reigns
68. Kindness makes Friends
69. In God we Trust
70. Obey your Parents
71. Be Strong and of good Courage
72. Absent but not Forgotten
73. Honesty, Industry and Sobriety
74. He Guides his beloved
75. I am the Bread of Life
76. Grace—Peace and Mercy
77. Sweet Rest in Heaven
78. Shall we gather at the River
79. Hallowed Be Thy Name
80. Many a cloud hath a Silver Lining
81. Freedom, Charity, Friendship
82. Poem, "Little Deeds of Kindness—Little words of love, Make on Earth an Eden—Like the Heaven above."

We thank Mr. Reynolds for taking the time to share this information with other interested collectors, and thereby bringing the total number of known patterns for wool worked mottoes up to 82.

Hair-Work Jewelry

HUMAN hair, in a multiplicity of tones, from the whitest, through the flaxens, the blonds, the reds, browns and chestnuts, to ebon-black, was once used cunningly to fashion jewelry and ornaments. The mourning aspect of it, using hair of the departed, was but a minor phase of the craze. To have a watchchain of the hair of one's beloved was, perhaps, for a young man, the last word. To wear a ring, a brooch, a necklace, of gold and hair . . . that was high style. Whether you shudder, or laugh, whether you like it or abhor it, is beside the point. This was a style and fashion, from the 1790's to the 1880's as witness the number of men and women who were either exclusively hair workers or who combined this art with the painting of miniatures, portraits, or the making of silhouettes and profiles.

Because a considerable quantity of this hair-work jewelry has been preserved, some of it so fine that it is not always recognized as hair-work, it might be well for all collectors, and all dealers in American antiques, to know something about it, and to see pictures of some of it. So universal was the vogue, the style, the fashion, or whatever one chooses to call it; with devotees in the highest, and the lowest, of the social scale, the range of quality is infinite. Tiffany, Kirk, Marquand, Bailey & Kitchin sold it. So did the pack peddler tramping 'cross country from Charleston to the back country. No section, no region of the country was without it. You can find it in Maine, and in California, in Texas and in North Dakota, in Utah and in Rhode Island.

It is said that, in the trade, hair-workers were called "spiders" because they wove, knitted, crocheted and spun human hair into pendants, rolls, orbs, chains, tubes and crescents; and because they sewed it, with fine needles, into pictures, or made it into flowers. Sometimes the setting, and trimming, was of 18k gold. Sometimes of silver, sometimes of brass, or pewter. But it was jewelry. And its hold on the imagination of the people for almost a century is a documented fact. Here is a meagre sample of the scope of hair-work jewelry. At the Metropolitan Museum there is page after page of engravings of American hair-work, by individuals and concerns who made it for the jewelry trade. It was sold

Hair-work jewelry by A. Bernhard & Co, 1870. The prices, in pencil, hardly noticed on the picture, are as follows: Top row items $13, $12, $15, $15.75, $8.75, $5.90. Center row: $7.25, $8.25, $9.75, $9.87, $9.95, $15.75, $10. Bottom row: $18, $17.50, $10, $8.75, $10, $9.50. It may be suspected these are the prices to the Jeweler, for the trimming, of gold, added considerably to the cost. The small items in form of pendants are ear ornaments, the large pieces are breast pins. The price of the ear ornaments, of course, is for a pair.—Drepperd Collection.

Brooch and pin panels of hair-work, for insertion in gold frames. The items here pictured are from a group of a line of over 2000 numbers produced by Peckham Merrill Fitch & Co of New York, c. 1858-1865.—Metropolitan Museum by the early 19th century silver and goldsmiths. It was made to order by amateurs in many villages and towns. Is it an antique of tomorrow? Who can tell? It is not ours to prophecy, nor shall we steal away the hours, days and months of fun that await some patient researcher in ferreting out the names of the various makers. But this much can be said without fear of contradiction: there will be an increasing number of collectors of hair-work. And there are, of record, some masterpieces of hair-work in the form of complete bouquets of flowers, of ship models, of clock cases, of effigies of birds, all under glass! Isn't it a phase of social history worth delving into by the collectors of this day? We think so, but we shall not make an issue of it. This is one antique concerning which there can be no middle ground. You'll either like it, or it will repel you. It is making one of us feel a little crawly, but we are fascinated just the same. —

Book Reviews

Boynton's Bicycle Railway System: Facsimile of the original brochure, 1891. The Americana Foundation, 1953. $4

If ever anyone writes a book on "The Unbelievable that Happened in the U.S.A.", this brochure will be entitled to a full chapter. When your reviewer received this item we were inclined to dismiss the whole thing as a sort of colossal joke. But it wasn't and it isn't, and every collector of Railroad History should relish this contribution, perhaps the most fantastically practical idea ever promoted. Railroad locomotives and cars that ran, like bicycles, on one rail . . . thus making every existing single track railroad a double track system! The idea was endorsed by the U. S. Commissioner of patents. The locomotives and cars were built. A sample line of rail and support was built—on Long Island—and the whole thing proved operable. Shades of Lucius Beebe, James Melton, and all other moguls of transportation collecting, this is a something! Here are all the pictures of actual and proposed rolling stock, rail lines, et cetera. Imagine it, double-deck cars, bedroom cars, observation cars, elevated lines, street lines, suburban lines, all designed for single rail carriage. Page Buck Rogers! He needn't always look forward . . . he can look backward at this amazing idea and get a thrill.

One feels like congratulating the Americana Foundation on issuing this now excessively rare brochure in exact facsimile. They may be sorry they limited the edition to 1000 copies. We do not think that will be enough to go 'round. If you have any hankering for Railroad Antiques, you'd better get a copy of this while you can. The originals, we understand, have a price tag of around $250. At $4 the facsimile is a bargain.

The Drepperd Blunderbuss Pistol

at the bottom of the butt, or grip, covers an orifice in which the detonating caps were carried. There is an enlargement of the "lock" or firing mechanism shown in our picture; it is of wrought iron, hand engraved. The ramrod has a screw-end to clean out the barrel, and there are brass fittings to hold the rod as well as a brass screw plate opposite the hammer screw. This pistol was found some twenty years ago by Joe Kindig, Jr., of York, Pennsylvania. In case you are interested, there are a number of descendants of the Drepperd Gun cartel active—but not as gunsmiths — in our country today, including Colonel William J. Drepperd, an honorary Colonel of Kentucky whose commission reads, "Granted in recognition of the great service rendered by your ancestors in the Development of Kentucky", and Carl W. Drepperd, his son, who is known to quite a few antiques collectors for his popular primers about American antiques.

Bonnetieres from Belgium

By Constance W. Dressler

BONNET stands, they call them at the antiques shows where, for the past ten or more years, examples have been on display and most generally sold. The features on these stands, really life-size female heads, are quite dainty, coy, and engaging. They're very chic, and one thinks there must be a French influence. There is. France, or Belgium and as likely as not Belgium, as far as examples in America are concerned. Somehow, we had more Belgian importers than out-and-out French concerns. Belgium, once the province of the Netherlands known as Brabant, borders France and its official language is French. But the bonnetieres we show here, by courtesy of our good friend Dr. Franklin van den Wijngaert, conservator of the Museum voor Folklore at Antwerp, are probably all Belgian make. At times, if you examine an example carefully, you'll find a label or mark of the maker either at the back of the neck, near the baseline, or just inside the hollow neck near the rim.

Of course the majority of these stands are hollow, being made of thin but sturdy papier-mache, or else of the even stronger laminated paper. They are painted over many times, and then given their coy, delightful features, rouge spots, and cupid bow lips. The hair is painted on, and you can choose from the ashiest of blonds, through the yellows, to red, chestnut, auburn, and black. The pale blonds were used almost exclusively to display black lace caps; the black haired models to display white lace caps.

Were these bonnetieres ever used in American milliners' shops? Indeed yes. Both imported ones of papier-mache, and solid ones of wood, turned on the Blanchard lathe, made right here in America. There are even hand carved ones of record, some of which are true pioneer art.

It is no problem at all to place these delightful objects in their proper period category. They were shop display stands and so would be display material or display furniture. It should be no problem to place them in our collecting scene. Out of the shop, into the private boudoir of the collector where, a row of them in the hat closet would serve well indeed as hat stands. But imagine it! They're making them into lamps and some very pretty ones are being used as decorative busts.

How Others Use Their Antiques

Trivets Around The Fire

THE wide variety of shapes and designs to be found in trivets, as well as their many decorative uses, makes them exceptionally interesting collectibles. They lend themselves well to such decorative treatments as framing a door or archway—or filling awkward narrow wall spaces between windows. They serve equally well, singly or in pairs, for a lonesome spot on the kitchen wall, as in quantity, arranged in a geometric grouping against a pine paneled wall or an outside porch or chimney.

Also, as Mrs. Paul Baudermann of Livingston, New Jersey, discovered for herself, they make a delightful fireplace facing. Mrs. Baudermann had always been intrigued with tiled fireplace facings, but as such seemed impractical in her present house, she called her trivet collection into action. No more attractive background could she have found for the exceptionally fine examples she has collected over the past two years. The Ironstone on her mantel, the iron pot on its high trivet, the copper kettle and other carefully selected accessories all blend in feeling. Trivets, fireplace—and conversation—have benefited from Mrs. Baudermann's ingenuity.

CREAM: WE LOVE IT: From MAY WHITEHEAD: The 100th issue was perfect and I loved seeing the pictures of staff and others. All the articles were so good. You all did a grand job. HAROLD HUNGERFORD: The only criticism I could make of your magazine is that it comes out only once a month. I wish it came out every two weeks. (Heaven forbid!). EMMELINE LOU BALLOU: Can't tell you how proud I am to be one of the Spinning Wheel family. Have made many nice friends in this "unseen" but yet so friendly circle . . . NICODEMUS ANTIQUES: The 100th issue is so interesting and attractive I find something new in it each time I pick it up. (This issue is nice, too.) MARY BURNS: I'm so delighted with Spinning Wheel that I browse through it at the breakfast table, take it with me to my husband's delicatessen and read it in between selling beer, baloney and dill pickles. I do have a shop in the basement of my home and though I am not available at all times I make appointments . . I have a bulletin board in our store and post things to sell and articles wanted . . even a list of baby sitters for the community . . (we could read the bulletin board while we ate dill pickles!) 1730 HOUSE: May issue certainly your best yet. We've done well through our ads . . we'll continue to send them if you'll continue to send buyers! (We'll do our best.) Couldn't help loving the letter from the ex-school teacher who gave Memo from Marcia an A plus . . . and got a real cozy feeling for the New Windsor reader who said the magazine came in the midst of her housecleaning . . . because she feels less guilty to read standing up if she's supposed to be doing something else, she stood up from cover to cover . . . on one foot, too . . . because Spinning Wheel was extra nice . . . and she was extra busy!

What Is It Worth?

This is the most frequently asked question among those interested in things old. And it is truly the $64 question. Furthermore it is such a question that can never be answered accurately, to the specific dollar and cent.

A New York newspaper recently reported that a young medical student, who wished to cash in some of his assets to further his career, took an Egyptian mummy to a noted appraiser before offering it for sale. The appraiser assured him that its date was around 1000 B.C. and its value no less than $1,500. The student was delighted to know that this item he had picked up in a curio shop in Cairo for $40 was so valuable. And on his merry way he went, to sell the mummy for $1,500.

Two years later, after having offered it to Museums and other Societies, the mummy is still unsold. Yet it is still documented as being of ancient vintage; still valued at around $1,500 — but apparently no one is interested these days in an old mummy.

While this may be an over-emphasized example of value versus marketability, it is true to great extents in smaller items on today's market. The student may find a buyer at $500 tomorrow (to whom he might be willing to sell in view of his original expenditure); he may wait another year and sell at $1,500; or still later find an extremely interested collector who so desires such item he will pay more than $1,500. Who can say? It happens every day.

Thus supply and demand, which are both as rapidly changing scenes as they are on the market of modern goods, are responsible for prices and marketability, and are responsible then for "what anything antique is worth" at best being a nebulous conclusion.

Nevertheless, the question still continues to be asked; and in answer, a multitude of "price guides" or books with "price guide" tables have been published. The authors themselves are well aware that such a guide is precisely that and no more; a guide to what we shall call "vicinity values" because such "guide prices" are usually taken from the average sale price such items have brought over a period of years. They do offer inestimable help to both new dealers as well as collectors in establishing a range, or a starting point of value from which to work backwards or forwards depending on the current market.

So we present, in the adjacent column, a list of "price guide" books, selected in response to the innumerable queries that have reached us. If these books are used with the above thoughts in mind, they can and will contribute greatly in determining approximate values.
